

Contents

Acknowledgments	vii
Introduction: Melancholy, Language, and Madness	1
1 Therapeutic Languages: Ancient Moral Philosophy and Patristic Christianity	19
2 Melancholy among the Passions in Seventeenth-century Thought	27
Spiritual exercises and the anatomy of melancholy	29
Melancholy and the moral physiology of Thomas Willis	38
3 The Pastoral Care of Melancholy in Calvinist England	47
Religious despair and religious melancholy	49
The devil's bath	64
Ministers, madmen, and women	77
4 Anglicanism, Melancholy, and the Restoration Critique of "Enthusiasm"	83
Anti-Calvinist antidotes: Simon Patrick and the Latitudinarians	85
An Anglican tradition of consolation	98
5 The "Puritan Tradition"? Nonconformist Practical Divinity and the Critique of "Enthusiasm"	103
Richard Baxter: the sin of melancholy	105
Women, melancholy, and the critique of "enthusiasm"	114
Timothy Rogers: rewriting Calvinist consolation	118
6 From Religious Despair to Hypochondria: The Languages of Melancholy Transformed	129
The devil dissolved in his bath	131
Politeness and religious despair	139
Rewriting melancholy: medical theory in polite society	150
7 Curing Augustan Hysterics: Morality, Politics, and Religion	163
Hypochondria, hysteria, and the "contrivances of passion"	164
Luxury's plague: hypochondria and commercial society	174
Nervous disorder as conscience: George Cheyne's "wounded soul"	176

Conclusion	185
Bibliography	191
Index	209