

Contents

Preface	v
1. Introduction	1
2. Psycholinguistic research in morphology	5
2.1. Introduction	5
2.2. The lexicon	7
2.2.1. The lemma (head word) and the lexical entry	8
2.2.2. The status of affixes as lexical units	16
2.2.3. Structure of the lexical entry	19
2.2.4. Structure of the lexicon	21
2.3. Morphological processes	23
2.3.1. Analysis	23
2.3.1.1. Recognition	25
2.3.1.2. Manner of recognition	26
2.3.1.3. Stem recognition	27
2.3.1.4. Complex-word recognition	28
2.3.1.5. Affix recognition and segmentation processes ..	28
2.3.2. Synthesis	29
2.3.2.1. Role of the lexicon	29
2.3.2.2. Synthesis processes	30
2.3.3. Semantic analysis and synthesis	30
2.3.3.1. Semantic ambiguity	31
2.3.3.2. Semantics and analysis processes	31
2.4. Conclusion	33
3. Formal concepts: model-building	35
3.1. Introduction	35
3.2. Elements of a model of the morphological component	35
3.2.1. Introduction	35
3.2.2. Morphology as a component of grammar	35
3.2.3. Word-formation and the lexicon	44
3.2.4. The morphological component	46
3.2.4.1. Word-formation vs. inflection	46
3.2.4.2. Dimensionality of word-formation	49
3.3. Form and meaning relations in word-formation	50
3.3.1. The separation of form and meaning	50

3.3.2. Semiotics and word-formation	53
3.3.2.1. The (linguistic) sign	53
3.3.2.2. Structure of the sign	56
3.4. Units of analysis in word-formation	57
3.4.1. Lexical units	57
3.4.1.1. The word-form	57
3.4.1.2. The lexeme	58
3.4.2. Morphological units	60
3.4.2.1. The morph	60
3.4.2.2. The morpheme	60
3.4.2.3. The stem	62
3.4.2.4. The affix	63
3.4.3. Formal representation of lexical and morphological units	64
3.4.3.1. The signifiant of the linguistic sign	64
3.4.3.2. The signifié of the linguistic sign	64
3.4.3.3. The syntactics of the linguistic sign	65
3.5. The morphological operation	65
3.5.1. Base of the operation	65
3.5.2. Nature of the morphological operation	66
3.5.3. The signifiant of the operation: form rules	68
3.5.3.1. Conversion	69
3.5.3.2. Segmental form rules	71
3.5.3.2.1. Concatenation (affixation)	71
3.5.3.2.2. Modificatory form rules	72
3.5.3.3. Non-segmental form rules	73
3.5.3.4. Compounding	74
3.5.4. The signifiant of the operation: semantic rules	74
3.5.5. The signifiant of the operation: syntactic rules	76
3.5.6. The signifiant of the operation: rule-mappings	77
3.5.7. Constraints	79
3.6. Summary	80
3.7. The word-formation paradigm	82
3.7.1. The existence of the word-formation paradigm	82
3.7.2. The nature of the word-formation paradigm	84
3.7.3. Modelling the word-formation paradigm	87
3.7.3.1. Redundancy rules: the lexical paradigm	87
3.7.3.2. Van Marle (1985): On the Paradigmatic Dimension of Morphological Creativity	88
3.7.3.3. Guilbert (1975): La créativité lexicale	90
3.7.4. Model of the word-formation paradigm	92

3.7.5. Problems	93
3.7.5.1. Degree of abstraction of the representation	93
3.7.5.2. Membership in the paradigm: the operation	93
3.7.5.3. Base of the paradigm: lexical semantic criteria	94
3.7.5.4. Individual differences	94
3.7.6. Paradigm structures in the process-and-paradigm model	95
3.8. Conclusion	96
4. The semantics of word-formation	97
4.1. Introduction	97
4.2. Word-formation meaning vs. lexical meaning	97
4.3. Formal possibilities of representation for word-formation meanings	103
4.3.1. Labelling	104
4.3.2. The paraphrase	104
4.3.3. Componential analysis	107
4.3.4. Relations and functions as (an) expression of word-formation meanings	107
4.4. Design of a system of word-formation functions	108
4.4.1. List of word-formation functions	109
4.4.1.1. Primary functions	110
4.4.1.2. Secondary word-formation functions	120
4.4.1.3. Special functions	122
4.4.2. Problems	122
4.4.3. Inflectional meaning and derivational meaning	123
4.5. Lexical relationships	124
4.5.1. Lexical relationships between word-formations	124
4.5.2. Word-formation meaning and paradigmatic relationships	124
4.5.3. Lexical meaning and the paradigm	126
4.5.3.1. Polysemy and synonymy	126
4.5.3.2. Lexicalization	127
4.5.3.3. Core meaning vs. figurative meaning	128
4.5.3.4. Extra-linguistic information	128
4.5.3.5. The situational or participant role	129
4.6. Semantics in the lexical and word-formation paradigms	131
5. Productivity and norm	133
5.1. Introduction	133
5.2. Productivity	133
5.2.1. Notions of productivity	133

5.2.2. Productivity and frequency	133
5.2.3. Productivity and transparency	134
5.2.4. Productivity and regularity	135
5.2.5. Formal concepts of productivity	136
5.2.6. Productivity and the word-formation paradigm	138
5.3. Norm	139
5.3.1. Generalities	139
5.3.2. Norm I	140
5.3.2.1. The prescriptive norm	140
5.3.2.2. Morphological naturalness	142
5.3.3. Norm II	142
5.3.3.1. System-defining properties and canonical expectations	143
5.3.3.2. Norm II and productivity	150
5.3.3.3. Diachrony and Norm II	152
5.3.4. Relations between Norm I and Norm II	153
5.4. Conclusion	153
6. Historical investigation: sources and parameters	155
6.1. Introduction	155
6.2. Empirical investigation: goals and data sources	155
6.3. Lexicographical sources	159
6.3.1. Period I: Maaler (Maa)	159
6.3.2. Period II: Stieler (Sti)	161
6.3.3. Period II: Steinbach (Stb)	164
6.3.4. Period III: Adelung (Ad)	166
6.3.5. Additional lexicographical sources	171
6.4. Prose text sources	171
6.5. Presentation of results	173
6.6. Hypotheses	175
7. Systemic development of denominal adjective derivation in German: 16th - 19th centuries	177
7.1. Period I: 16th-century German	177
7.1.1. Word-formation processes in denominal adjective formation	177
7.1.2. Rules and rule elements in the denominal adjective system	178
7.1.3. Operations in the denominal adjective system	182
7.1.3.1. Operations in slot -I: prefixation	183

7.1.3.2. Operation on the base: apophony or umlaut	184
7.1.3.3. Operations in slot I: suffixation	186
7.1.3.4. Operations in slot II: suffixation	188
7.1.4. Semantic organization of the denominal adjective paradigm	202
7.1.5. The deadjectival adjective paradigm	208
7.1.6. Lexico-semantic classes	213
7.1.6.1. The lexico-semantic class of Concrete Object Designations	213
7.1.6.2. The lexico-semantic class of Concrete Substance Designations	219
7.1.6.3. Pure Substance subclasses: the lexico-semantic classes of Metal Designations and Tree Designations	224
7.1.6.4. Hybrid classes: the lexico-semantic class of Body Part Designations	229
7.1.6.5. Hybrid classes: the lexico-semantic class of Landscape Feature Designations	233
7.1.6.6. Hybrid classes: the lexico-semantic class of Animal Designations	237
7.1.6.7. Hybrid classes: the lexico-semantic class of Food Designations	242
7.1.6.8. Hybrid classes: the lexico-semantic class of Illness Designations	244
7.1.6.9. Pure Object classes: the lexico-semantic class of Measure Unit Designations	247
7.1.6.10. Pure Object classes: the lexico-semantic class of Person Designations	249
7.1.6.11. The lexico-semantic class of General Abstract Designations	255
7.1.6.12. The lexico-semantic class of Mental State, Attribute, and Process Designations	261
7.1.6.13. The lexico-semantic class of Process, Activity, and State Designations	274
7.1.6.14. The lexico-semantic class of Place and Institution Designations	281
7.1.6.15. The lexico-semantic class of Media Designations	284
7.1.6.16. The lexico-semantic class of Time Unit Designations	287
7.1.6.17. Conclusions	291

7.2. Period II: 17th- and 18th-century German	291
7.2.1. Word-formation processes in denominal adjective formation	291
7.2.2. Rules and rule elements in the denominal adjective system	293
7.2.3. Operations in the denominal adjective system	296
7.2.3.1. Operations in slot -I: prefixation	296
7.2.3.2. Operations on the base: apophony or umlaut	299
7.2.3.3. Operations in slot I: suffixation	300
7.2.3.4. Operations in slot II: suffixation	301
7.2.4. Semantic organization of the denominal adjective paradigm	329
7.2.5. The deadjectival adjective paradigm	332
7.2.6. Lexico-semantic classes	337
7.2.6.1. The lexico-semantic class of Concrete Object Designations	337
7.2.6.2. The lexico-semantic class of Concrete Substance Designations	351
7.2.6.3. Pure Substance subclasses: the lexico-semantic classes of Metal/Precious Stone Designations and Tree Designations	363
7.2.6.4. Hybrid classes: the lexico-semantic class of Body Part Designations	372
7.2.6.5. Hybrid classes: the lexico-semantic class of Landscape Feature Designations	381
7.2.6.6. Hybrid classes: the lexico-semantic class of Animal Designations	390
7.2.6.7. Hybrid classes: the lexico-semantic class of Food Designations	401
7.2.6.8. Hybrid classes: the lexico-semantic class of Illness Designations	407
7.2.6.9. Pure Object classes: the lexico-semantic class of Measure Unit Designations	411
7.2.6.10. Pure Object classes: the lexico-semantic class of Person Designations	415
7.2.6.11. The lexico-semantic class of General Abstract Designations	422
7.2.6.12. The lexico-semantic class of Mental State, Attribute, and Process Designations	433
7.2.6.13. The lexico-semantic class of Process, Activity, and State Designations	442
7.2.6.14. The lexico-semantic class of Place and Institution Designations	448

7.2.6.15. The lexico-semantic class of Media Designations .	458
7.2.6.16. The lexico-semantic class of Time Unit Designations	464
7.2.6.17. Conclusion	470
7.3. Period III: late 18th — early 19th century German	471
7.3.1. Word-formation processes in denominal adjective formation	471
7.3.2. Rules and rule elements	473
7.3.3. Operations in the denominal adjective system	475
7.3.3.1. Operations in slot -I: prefixation	475
7.3.3.2. Operation on the base: apophony or umlaut	477
7.3.3.3. Operations in slot I: suffixation	478
7.3.3.4. Operations in slot II: suffixation	479
7.3.4. Semantic organization of the denominal adjective paradigm	506
7.3.5. Deadjectival adjective formation in Ad	513
7.3.6. Lexico-semantic classes in Ad	518
7.3.6.1. The lexico-semantic class of Concrete Object Designations	518
7.3.6.2. The lexico-semantic class of Substance Designations	529
7.3.6.3. Pure Substance subclasses: the lexico-semantic class of Metal/Precious Stone and Tree Designations . . .	540
7.3.6.4. Hybrid classes: the lexico-semantic class of Body Part Designations	547
7.3.6.5. Hybrid classes: the lexico-semantic class of Landscape Designations	554
7.3.6.6. Hybrid classes: the lexico-semantic class of Animal Designations	560
7.3.6.7. Hybrid classes: the lexico-semantic class of Food Designations	566
7.3.6.8. Hybrid classes: the lexico-semantic class of Illness Designations	571
7.3.6.9. Pure Object classes: the lexico-semantic class of Measure Unit Designations	576
7.3.6.10. Pure Object classes: the lexico-semantic class of Person Designations	579
7.3.6.11. The lexico-semantic class of General Abstract Designations	586
7.3.6.12. The lexico-semantic class of Mental State, Attribute, and Process Designations	594
7.3.6.13. The lexico-semantic class of Process, Activity, and State Designations	601

7.3.6.14. The lexico-semantic class of Place and Institution Designations	608
7.3.6.15. The lexico-semantic class of Media Designations	616
7.3.6.16. The lexico-semantic class of Time Unit Designations	621
7.3.6.17. Conclusions	625
8. Discussion and conclusions: word-formation morphology and the nature of change	627
8.1. Paths of change: structural levels	627
8.1.1. Word-formation processes in the denominal adjective domain	627
8.1.2. Elements of form rules in the denominal adjective formation system	630
8.1.3. Rules and operations	631
8.1.4. The word-formation paradigm	641
8.1.5. Lexical paradigms	647
8.1.6. The deadjectival adjective	654
8.2. Elaboration of formal concepts	655
8.2.1. The word-formation rule and the word-formation operation	655
8.2.2. The word-formation paradigm	658
8.2.3. The lexico-semantic class	662
8.3. Productivity	666
8.4. Standardization	679
8.5. Language change	687
8.6. Conclusion	697
Notes	699
References	715
Index	735