

Contents

Preface	vii
Chapter 1: The genesis of the study	1
The politics of researching 'punters'	6
The traditional absence of the male client	7
Why include men in research on the sex industries?	8
Chapter 2: Researching men who buy sex	13
Locating the population	13
The empirical study	16
Recruitment: the procedure	17
Recruitment: me, men and motivations	21
Turning a secret story into a public testimony	27
Emotional labour and the therapeutic interview	30
The data sources	32
The participants	33
Chapter 3: Client conduct: motivations, markets and morality	38
Evidence from surveys	38
Motivations	39
Trajectories of being a client	46
Markets, exploitation and morality	49
Rules, etiquette and benchmarking	56
Chapter 4: Buying sex online: virtual regulation	62
Technology meets the sex markets	63
Accessibility and intimacy in the virtual arena	70
Learning to be a 'punter'	73
Community, identity and friendship	79
Theorizing Internet usage by male clients	85

Chapter 5: Buying intimacy: pleasure, commerce and the self	88
Intimacy meets the sex markets	89
Becoming a 'regular' client	91
Vulnerability and emotional attachment	103
The contradictions of marriage	107
Commerce and the 'transformation of intimacy'	109
Chapter 6: Against respectability: stigma, secrecy and the self	112
Human difference and the origin of stigma	113
Guilt and 'crossing the line'	120
Managing stigma	124
The normal deviant	129
Chapter 7: Criminalizing the customer: moral messages	133
Re-emphasis on who is the problem	133
The policy and political agenda	141
Kerb-crawler 'rehabilitation' programmes	154
Male sexuality, 'respectability' and New Labour	159
Chapter 8: Moral panic: the 'punter' as danger	162
Applying the concept of moral panic	162
Male sexuality as danger	173
Men who act violently towards sex workers	178
Consequences of the social reaction	180
'Risky' male sexuality as a system of social control	182
Chapter 9: Shifting sexual cultures, moving masculinities	187
A changing sexual morality?	188
The push factors	191
The pull factors	195
Take what's on offer, but be damned if you do	201
Appendix: List of interviewees	209
Bibliography	211
Index	231