

[Contents]

Acknowledgments xi

PART I "But what am I, then?" Chasing Personal Essences across National Literatures

1. Ural Mountains—Rome—London 1
2. Essentialism, Functionalism, and Cognitive Psychology 6
3. Possible Evolutionary Origins of Essentialist Thinking 13
4. "A bullet's a bullet's a bullet!" 15
5. Talk to the Door Politely or Tickle It in Exactly the Right Place 17
6. Resisting Essentialism 19
7. The Ever-Receding "Essence" of Sosia 23
8. Identical Twins and Theater 30
9. How Is Mr. Darcy Different from Colin Firth? 37
10. Looking for the Real Mademoiselle 42
11. "Mahatma Gandhi: war!" "But he was a pacifist." "Right! War!" 48

PART 2 Why Robots Go Astray, or The Cognitive Foundations of the Frankenstein Complex

1. What Is the Frankenstein Complex? 51
2. On Zygoons, Thricklers, and Kerpas 55
3. Theory of Mind 57
4. Theory of Mind and Categorization: Preliminary Implications 63
5. Concepts That Resist Categorization 65
6. . . . and the Stories They Make Possible 68
7. The Stories That Can Be Told about a Talking Needle 72
8. Asimov's "The Bicentennial Man" 75
9. Cognitive Construction of "Undoubted Facts":
"The Bicentennial Man" and the Logic of Essentialism 79
10. Made to Rebel 85

11. Why Phyllis Is Still a Robot	89
12. . . . and Why Rei Toei Is Not	96
13. More Human Than Thou (Piercy's He, She and It)	100
14. Made to Pray	116
15. Made to Serve. Made to Obey. Made to Break Hearts	122

PART 3 Some Species of Nonsense

1. How Nonsense Makes Sense in The Hunting of the Snark	133
2. "Strings of Impossibilia" and What They Tell Us about the Value of Nonsense	141
3. "Painters of the Unimaginable," or More about Really Strange Concepts	146
Conclusion: Almost beyond Fiction	166

Notes	173
Bibliography	195
Index	207