

Contents

Figures and tables	viii
Acknowledgements	xv
1	Introduction	1
	Rationale	3
	The importance of the family to the child	3
	Definition of ‘family’	4
	Research questions	7
	Design of the study	8
2	Socio-historical background	13
	Foster care	13
	Fostering by relatives	15
	Private foster care	16
	Residential and institutional care	17
	Supervision at home	23
	General development in child care services	23
	Evolution of the place of the child within the family generally	26
	Discipline and abuse	28
3	Legal aspects of substitute care in Ireland	31
	General legal context in which compulsory care is set	32
	Voluntary admissions	37
	Other matters relating to child care	38
	The Child Care Act 1991	39

4	Admissions to and discharges from care	43
	The number of children in care in Ireland	44
	Inflows and outflows to care	49
	Assessment and criteria for reception into care	50
	Age	53
	Birth status	57
	Type of placement	61
	Foster care	65
	Residential care	67
	Major policy issues emerging	71
5	Familial and kinship characteristics	73
	Household and family types	73
	Social class by occupation	75
	Source of income of parents	77
	The age of the parents	79
	The education of the parents	80
	Single and lone parents	81
	Housing	84
	Support networks of the families – kin and neighbours	86
	The parents' own experience of care	89
	Main issues arising	93
6	Formal family support services	95
	Home help	95
	Day care	97
	Other services likely to support families at risk	99
	The initial referral of the family	100
	Teacher and school involvement	101
	Main issues arising	102
7	Reasons for admission and discharge from care	105
	The internal context – problems within the family	106
	The external context	107
	Child centred problems as reasons for care	110
	Child abuse	111
	The type of care experienced by the child by child centred reasons for care	129
	New arrangements in the Mid West for admissions to care	132
	Retention in care	133
	Reasons for discharge from care	137

	Main findings	142
8	Experiences in care	145
	The number of times a child was placed in care	145
	Care episodes and moves	146
	Family contacts	150
	The suitability of the placement	160
	Time spent in care	161
9	Traveller children in care	167
	Health	174
	Education	176
	Accommodation	177
	Problems in the family leading to placement in care	179
	Support networks – kin, neighbourhood and social services	182
	Main findings	183
10	Conclusions and recommendations	185
	Conclusions and recommendations – the children and the families	186
	Formal interventions	196
	The future	201
	Final remarks	202
	Appendices
	A Health board areas and population densities	205
	B The general structure of Ireland's health care system	206
	C Community care structure	207
	D Health board programme structure	208
	E Phased implementation of Child Care Act 1991 – provisions commenced as of 1 December 1992	209
	Bibliography	211

Figures and tables

Figures

Figure 4.1	Inflows to and outflows to care 1989	50
Figure 4.2	Present age of children in care during 1989	55
Figure 4.3	Present age by care type during 1989	63
Figure 9.1	Age structure of national and Traveller populations, 1986	175

Tables

Table 4.1	Admissions to care: Ireland, 1980–1989	44
Table 4.2	Number of children in care on 31 December: Ireland, 1980–1989	45
Table 4.3	Discharges from care: Ireland	45
Table 4.4	Admissions to care by community care area – Mid Western Health Board region (percentage by row) and rate per 1,000 children in population 0–16 years	46
Table 4.5	Children in care on 31 December of each year by community care area in the Mid Western Health Board (includes children placed for adoption)	47

Table 4.6	Rate per '000 children in care on 31 December, 1989 (includes children placed for adoption)	48
Table 4.7	Discharges from care by community care area	49
Table 4.8	Who made the initial decision to admit a child to care or to apply to a court for a care order? Children in care during 1989	51
Table 4.9	Age at admission of those in care at any time during 1989 by community care areas	53
Table 4.10	Age at admission – children under school age and children over school age	54
Table 4.11	Present age by community care area	54
Table 4.12	Age at admission and 'present age' by community care area – children in care at any time during 1989	56
Table 4.13	Comparison of age groups of children in care on 31 December 1989 with Census of Population 1986 for the Mid Western Health Board	56
Table 4.14	Birth status of children in care at any time during 1989 by area	58
Table 4.15	Children's legal status by the length of their stay in care – children in care on 31 December 1989	59
Table 4.16	Percentages of court order and voluntary admissions for those in care on 31 December 1989	60
Table 4.17	Type of care – children in care during 1989	62
Table 4.18	Community care area by type of care, short or long term – children in care at any time during 1989	62
Table 4.19	Community care area by type of care – foster or residential	64

Table 4.20	Gender of child in care by whether in foster or residential care	64
Table 4.21	Present age of children in foster care during 1989	65
Table 4.22	Birth status by type of care – children in foster care during 1989	66
Table 4.23	Some characteristics of children in residential care during 1989	69
Table 4.24	Reason given for child being in residential care	70
Table 5.1	Households of children in care	74
Table 5.2	The type and size of family from which children in care came in the Mid Western Health Board region compared with Labour Force Survey data	75
Table 5.3	The social class of the parents of the children in care assessed by their occupation, and compared with the Census of Population data for the Mid West region	76
Table 5.4	Source of income of the fathers of children in care	78
Table 5.5	Comparison between census data on levels of full-time employment and the parents in the present study	78
Table 5.6	The age of the mothers and fathers of children in care in 1989 in the Mid West region	79
Table 5.7	Education level by decade – mothers and fathers of children in care compared with the general population	80
Table 5.8	The type of housing occupied by the families when the children were admitted to care	85
Table 5.9	The type of ownership – comparison with 1981 Census of Population housing data	86

Table 5.10	The kin support networks of the families of the children in care during 1989	88
Table 5.11	The neighbourhood and/or friends support available to the families of children in care during 1989	89
Table 5.12	Comparison on some relevant variables between parents who had been in care and those who had not	90
Table 6.1	Home help service 1987 – Ireland	96
Table 6.2	Family support services	99
Table 6.3	The route through which the family first came to the attention of the health board	101
Table 7.1	Internal family problems as reasons for care by rank of importance – family units	107
Table 7.2	Community care area by father's current employment status	108
Table 7.3	Child centred problems as reasons for placement in care by rank of importance – individual children	111
Table 7.4	Where sexual abuse was a primary reason for care in present study contrasted with the McKeown and Gilligan sample	114
Table 7.5	Some of the characteristics of the children in care because of neglect compared with other children in care	118
Table 7.6	Neglect as a primary reason for care analyzed by internal family problems as reasons for care	122
Table 7.7A	Where neglect was given as the first reason for care combined with other reasons	124
Table 7.7B	Where a crisis in the family was given as a first reason for care combined with other reasons	125

Table 7.7C	Where the abandonment of the child was given as a first reason for care combined with other reasons	125
Table 7.7D	Where sexual abuse was given as a first reason for care combined with other reasons	125
Table 7.7E	Where emotional abuse was given as a first reason for care combined with other reasons	126
Table 7.7F	Where physical abuse was given as a first reason for care combined with other reasons	126
Table 7.7G	Where the child being out of control was given as a first reason for care combined with other reasons	126
Table 7.8A	The legal basis for admission by the primary child centred reasons for care	127
Table 7.8B	The legal basis for admission by the primary family centred reasons for care	127
Table 7.9	Child centred problems ranked one, analyzed by internal family problems ranked one	128
Table 7.10	The type of care by first ranked child centred reason – children in care during 1989	130
Table 7.11A	The employment status of father by the child centred reasons for care	131
Table 7.11B	The employment status of father by the family related reasons for care	131
Table 7.12	Whether parents were able and/or unwilling to accommodate their children if discharged from care	133
Table 7.13	Cases where the parents were able and willing to have their children returned to them but the children were retained in care	135

Table 7.14	Where (i) the child's parents were unable to care for him or her; (ii) the child's parents were able and willing to care but were not allowed to do so, and (iii) the child's parents were able but unwilling to care for the child	137
Table 7.15	Reasons for discharge from care	140
Table 8.1	The number of times a child had a care experience – children in care during 1989	145
Table 8.1A	The type of care provided for children who had had one or more previous care experiences	146
Table 8.2	The rankings of the reasons for the present admission to care of children who had had a previous care experience. In parentheses are proportions of children whose only care experience is the present one	147
Table 8.3	The changes in the placements of children in care during 1989	148
Table 8.4	The length of time in care and the type of care of the children who had a change in their placement while they were in care	149
Table 8.5	Why the changes in the type of care were necessary	149
Table 8.6	Contacts between parents and their children in care by a number of variables	156
Table 8.7	Comparisons between children in care for more than one year and children in care for less than one year	162
Table 9.1	Traveller families – type of living conditions	169
Table 9.2	Demographic characteristics of Traveller children in care compared with the general in-care population, exclusive of Travellers	170

Table 9.3	Traveller children in care compared with other children in care on certain variables	172
Table 9.4	Characteristics of the families of Travellers and non-Travellers with children in care	173
Table 9.5	Causes of deaths of all Travellers in Ireland	178
Table 9.6	Child centred problems leading to placement in care – Traveller children contrasted with non-Traveller children in care	180
Table 9.7	Family problems leading to placement in care – Traveller children contrasted with non-Traveller children in care	181