

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Acknowledgements	8
Preface	9
Executive summary	11
General introduction	17
Chapter 1 The dawn of the rebalancing process	23
Formation of the public sector: the frame of reference	24
The desire for economic independence	24
Exaltation of the economic role of the state	25
Development economics, public economics and the mixed economy	28
National experiences	33
The state-dominated mixed economy	34
The state-promoted mixed economy	43
Promotion of the public sector in favour of particular interests	52
Conclusion	57
Chapter 2 Rebalancing: the turning-point	61
The public enterprises in question	61
Position of public enterprises in national economies	62
The public enterprises on trial	72
The choice of orthodox principles	83
Stabilization policies — mixed economies called into question	84
The changeover to an open market economy, a new framework of reference for development policies	93
Conclusion	109
Notes and references	111
Chapter 3 Privatisation	113
The concept of privatisation: definition and justification	113
Definition of privatisation	114
What should be privatised?	118

The wide variety of privatisation procedures	125
Transfer of public enterprises	126
Strengthening the role of the private sector	137
Three case studies	140
Microeconomic and empirical analysis of the privatisation operations	148
Sectoral analysis	148
The "strategic" sectors	154
Notes and references	159
 Chapter 4 The impact of privatisations (or the necessary interaction with other forms of rebalancing)	 163
The impact on the state's financial burden	163
The analytical framework of the impact on the budget deficit	164
Empirical application and assessment of the impact on the budget	170
The impact on economic efficiency	181
Privatisation, competition and economic efficiency	182
Changes in the competitive position of privatised enterprises	190
The social impact of privatisations	195
Public sector enterprises and social objectives	195
The various levels of social impact	197
Conclusion	202
Notes and references	204
 Chapter 5 The future of rebalancing	 207
Conditions for irreversible rebalancing	208
The rebalancing process is incomplete	208
The moorings of rebalancing	215
The new balance of the public and private sectors	218
The emergence of the private sector	219
The public sector's new role	222
Conclusion	227
 General conclusion	 229
 Annex 1 Public bodies in charge of the various restructuring/privatisation programmes	 235
Annex 2 Identification of privatised enterprises in the sample countries	239
 General bibliography	 259

List of tables, graph and diagram

Table 1:	Population, GNP per inhabitant and growth rate in the sample developing countries	19
Table 2:	Position of the public enterprises in national economies	64
Table 3:	Sectoral division and the weight of the public enterprises at the dawn of rebalancing	68
Table 4:	Stabilization programmes and macroeconomic constraints	88
Table 5:	Measures for liberalisation of foreign trade	98
Table 6:	Financial liberalisation measures	101
Table 7:	Market deregulation measures	103
Table 8:	Measures relating to foreign investment codes	104
Table 9:	Methods of reforming the public sector	106
Table 10:	Privatisation operations: techniques used	130
Table 11:	Privatisation operations: sectors concerned	150
Table 12:	The strategic sectors	156
Table 13:	Main hypotheses	166
Table 14:	Assessment of the impact of the programmes for privatisation and restructuring of the public sector	176
Graph 1:	Terms of trade of the sample countries	80
Diagram 1:	Privatisation, regulation and economic efficiency	184