

---

Contents

|                                                       |                                                                                      |     |
|-------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1                                              | Introductory Remarks                                                          |     |
|                                                       | H.I. Christensen, H.-H. Nagel . . . . .                                       | 1   |
| <hr/>                                                 |                                                                                      |     |
| Part I Foundations of Cognitive Vision Systems |                                                                                      |     |
| <hr/>                                                 |                                                                                      |     |
| 2                                              | The Space of Cognitive Vision                                                 |     |
|                                                       | D. Vernon . . . . .                                                           | 7   |
| 3                                              | Cognitive Vision Needs Attention to Link Sensing with Recognition             |     |
|                                                       | J.K. Tsotsos . . . . .                                                        | 25  |
| 4                                              | Organization of Architectures for Cognitive Vision Systems                    |     |
|                                                       | G.H. Granlund . . . . .                                                       | 37  |
| 5                                              | Cognitive Vision Systems: From Ideas to Specifications                        |     |
|                                                       | H.-H. Nagel . . . . .                                                         | 57  |
| <hr/>                                                 |                                                                                      |     |
| Part II Recognition and Categorization         |                                                                                      |     |
| <hr/>                                                 |                                                                                      |     |
| 6                                              | A System for Object Class Detection                                           |     |
|                                                       | D. Hall . . . . .                                                             | 73  |
| 7                                              | Greedy Kernel Principal Component Analysis                                    |     |
|                                                       | V. Franc, V. Hlaváč . . . . .                                                 | 87  |
| 8                                              | Many-to-Many Feature Matching in Object Recognition                           |     |
|                                                       | A. Shokoufandeh, Y. Keselman, F. Demirci, D. Macrini, S. Dickinson . . . . .  | 107 |
| 9                                              | Integrating Video Information over Time. Example: Face Recognition from Video |     |
|                                                       | V. Krüger, S. Zhou, R. Chellappa . . . . .                                    | 127 |
| 10                                             | Interleaving Object Categorization and Segmentation                           |     |
|                                                       | B. Leibe, B. Schiele . . . . .                                                | 145 |

---

Part III Learning and Adaptation

---

- 11 Learning an Analysis Strategy for Knowledge-Based Exploration of Scenes
H. Niemann, U. Ahlrichs, D. Paulus . . . . . 165

---

Part IV Representation and Inference

---

- 12 Things That See: Context-Aware Multi-modal Interaction
J.L. Crowley . . . . . 183
- 13 Hierarchies Relating Topology and Geometry
W.G. Kropatsch, Y. Haxhimusa, P. Lienhardt . . . . . 199
- 14 Cognitive Vision: Integrating Symbolic Qualitative Representations with Computer Vision
A.G. Cohn, D.C. Hogg, B. Bennett, V. Devin, A. Galata, D.R. Magee, C. Needham, P. Santos . . . . . 221
- 15 On Scene Interpretation with Description Logics
B. Neumann, R. Möller . . . . . 247

---

Part V Control and Systems Integration

---

- 16 A Framework for Cognitive Vision Systems or Identifying Obstacles to Integration
Markus Vincze, Michael Zillich, Wolfgang Ponweiser . . . . . 279
- 17 Visual Capabilities in an Interactive Autonomous Robot
J.J. Little, J. Hoey, P. Elinas . . . . . 295

---

Part VI Conclusions

---

- 18 On Sampling the Spectrum of Approaches Toward Cognitive Vision Systems
H.-H. Nagel . . . . . 315

---

Part VII References, Subject Index, Author Index

---

- References . . . . . 323
- Subject Index . . . . . 355
- Author Index . . . . . 367