

Contents

Preface	vii
Contributors' addresses	ix
Introduction:
Phonological structure and its role in language processing Anne Cutler and Takashi Otake	1
Stem and word in Sino-Japanese
Junko Itô and Armin Mester	13
Syllable, mora and accent
Shosuke Haraguchi	45
Speech segmentation and phonological structure
Haruo Kubozono	77
When is a syllable not a syllable?
Mary E. Beckman	95
Phoneme/syllable perception and the temporal structure of speech
Kazuhiko Kakehi, Kazumi Kato and Makio Kashino	125
The role of suprasegmentals in speech perception and acquisition
Jacques Mehler, Josiane Bertoncini, Emmanuel Dupoux and Christophe Pallier	145
The role of accent in speech perception
Núria Sebastián-Gallés	171
Speech segmentation by Japanese listeners
Takashi Otake, Giyoo Hatano and Kiyoko Yoneyama	183

The psychological reality of speech units in Japanese José Morais, Régine Kolinsky and Miyoko Nakamura	203
--	-----

The roles of phonological and orthographic code in word stem completion Isabelle Peretz, Isabelle Lussier and Renée Béland	217
---	-----

Lexical access in continuous speech: Language-specific realisations of a universal model Anne Cutler, Dennis Norris and James McQueen	227
--	-----

Index	243
-----------------	-----