

CONTENTS

Book I. BRITAIN BEFORE THE ROMAN CONQUEST

I. THE STAGE OF HISTORY

The division of Britain into highland and lowland zones . . .	1
Their differences in landscape, soil, climate . . .	2
The permanent effect of the division on the history of Britain . .	3
Its special effect on the Roman occupation . . .	5
The highland zone as the military area . . .	7
The lowland zone as the civil area . . .	7
Human geography before the Roman conquest . . .	8
The lowland zone . . .	8
Chalk and oolite soils. Salisbury Plain as the centre of prehistoric Britain . . .	8
The Neolithic Age and the origin of Agriculture . . .	9
The Beaker invasion . . .	9
The Early Iron Age . . .	10
The contrast between the prehistoric and modern population-distributions . . .	10
Sand and gravel soils . . .	10
Uninhabited areas . . .	11
Communications . . .	13
The highland zone . . .	13
Megalithic culture . . .	13
The Beaker invasion . . .	14
The Bronze Age . . .	14
Communications between Britain and the Continent . . .	14

II. BRITAIN IN THE TIME OF JULIUS CAESAR

Physical characteristics of the ancient Britons . . .	16
Neolithic Age . . .	16
Bronze Age . . .	17
Roman period . . .	17
The Romano-British type . . .	17
Language . . .	18
P-Celts and Q-Celts . . .	18
Establishment of the Celtic language in Britain . . .	19
Material civilization . . .	19
Its Bronze-Age background . . .	20
Late Bronze-Age civilization, its general character . . .	21
Iron-Age cultures . . .	21
(1) The earliest, of Hallstatt type . . .	22
(2) South-western La Tène culture . . .	24
(3) North-eastern La Tène culture . . .	25
(4) The Belgae . . .	26
Coinage and currency . . .	29

General sketch of Britain in Caesar's time	29
The south-east	29
The Dorset-Yorkshire zone	30
The western fringe	30
The name Britannia	30

III. CAESAR'S INVASION

Caesar's intentions and motives	32
His reticence on these points	32
His tacit admission of failure	33
Origin of his British adventure	33
His intention must have been conquest	34
The reconnoissance of 55 B.C.	34
Information sought from Gaulish merchants	35
A fleet of transports extemporized	35
Caesar sails for Britain	36
The adventures of Commius	36
Caesar's landing	37
The gale and damage to his fleet	38
Damage repaired: Caesar returns to Gaul	39
Results of the reconnoissance	39
Caesar's apologetic tone	39
His failure to understand Channel navigation	40
The gain in information small	40
British tactics and the chariot	40
British agriculture and the food-supply for an army	41
The invasion of 54	42
New transports	42
Concentration at Boulogne	42
Mutiny in the camp: the fate of Dumnorix	43
The Channel crossed	43
Caesar's march into Kent	44
The gale, and his return to the coast	45
The fleet repaired and beached	45
The problem of Caesar's anchorage	45
Cassivellaunus brought into the war	46
His resistance to Caesar's renewed advance	47
Caesar's victory in a general engagement	48
Operations north of the Thames	49
Attack on his naval camp	50
Submission of Cassivellaunus	50
Caesar returns to Gaul	51
Results of the invasion	51
Its success in a military sense	51
Its political success	52
Financial considerations	52
Did Caesar intend to return and complete the conquest?	52
Why he did not do so	53

IV. FROM CAESAR TO CLAUDIUS

The conquest from Rome's point of view merely deferred . . .	54
Developments in Britain . . .	54
The Catuvellauni: their extension north-westward . . .	54
Commius creates a new western Belgic realm . . .	55
Its archaeology . . .	55
Its development . . .	56
Its civilization . . .	56
Coinage of these two realms . . .	57
Their fusion into one, in the time of Cunobelinus . . .	58
Other British coinages: Icenii, Dobunni, Brigantes . . .	58
Distribution of British coinage . . .	59
Its style: original derivation from Macedonian models . . .	61
Romanizing movement in first century A.D. . . .	62
Art of this period . . .	63
Pottery . . .	63
Metal-work and the finer arts . . .	65
Chronology of this work . . .	65
The Belgic Britons: their taste in art rather Roman than Celtic . . .	66
Celtic art in the north (Brigantia), west, and midlands . . .	67
Economic life . . .	68
Agriculture . . .	68
Mining and metallurgy . . .	68
Trade with the Continent . . .	70
Roman intentions with relation to Britain . . .	71
Augustus: the rumours of his intended British expeditions . . .	71
His excuses for not conquering Britain: Strabo's explanations . . .	72
British refusal to court his friendship . . .	73
His real intentions . . .	74
Tiberius . . .	74
Gaius: his projects for conquering Germany and Britain . . .	75

Book II. THE AGE OF CONQUEST

V. THE CLAUDIAN INVASION

Its motives . . .	76
The military situation . . .	77
The heritage of Gaius . . .	77
The financial situation . . .	77
The political situation . . .	78
The expeditionary force . . .	78
The plan of campaign based on Caesar . . .	78
Mutiny at Boulogne . . .	78
The invasion . . .	79
Landing in Britain . . .	79
Richborough . . .	80
The situation in Britain . . .	80
No organized resistance . . .	81
Togodumnus and Caratacus . . .	82

Battle of the Medway	83
Halt on the Thames	84
Arrival of Claudius and occupation of Colchester	85
The settlement of Britain	85
The realm of Cunobelinus becomes a province	85
Verulam becomes a municipium	86
Treatment of Non-Belgic realms	86
Cogidubnus and the Regni	87
The Iceni	87

VI. CARATACUS AND BOUDICCA

Caratacus	88
His flight to the west	88
Progress of the Roman conquest along radial lines	89
London its strategic centre	90
Advance in three columns	90
Ostorius Scapula governor	91
He finds the Brigantes and Silures troublesome	91
Creates a frontier on the Fosse	91
Disarms the tribes south-east of this	92
Revolt of the Iceni	92
Ostorius attacks the Degeangli	93
The Brigantes revolt against Cartimandua	93
The war between Ostorius and Caratacus	94
Ascendancy of Caratacus in the west	94
Ostorius plants a legion at or near Gloucester	94
The decisive battle	95
Caratacus betrayed to Ostorius by Cartimandua	96
Continued resistance of the Silures	96
To Ostorius	96
To Didius Gallus	97
who again supports Cartimandua against her subjects	97
To Veranius Nepos	98
The coming of Suetonius Paulinus	98
His campaign in north-western Wales	98
Boudicca	99
Revolt of Boudicca	99
Death of Prasutagus and treatment of his heirs	99
Beginning of the revolt	99
Fall of Colchester	100
Rout of the Ninth legion	100
Suetonius reaches London and evacuates it	101
Destruction of London and Verulam	102
Defeat of Boudicca	102
Suppression of the revolt	102
Severity of the governor	103
The new procurator, Classicianus, opposes him	103
Nero's special commission supports Classicianus	103
The views of Tacitus	103

VII. FROM BOUDICCA TO AGRICOLA

The later years of Nero	105
Peaceful state of Britain	105
The revolt of Vindex	106
The civil wars	106
Insubordination of the legions	106
Fall of Cartimandua	107
Revolt of Civilis	108
Accession of Vespasian	108
Petillius Cerialis	109
Julius Frontinus	110
Julius Agricola	113
His character	113
His first campaigns	114
His Caledonian war	115
Perdomita Britannia	116
The sequel	118

VIII. THE MAKING OF THE FRONTIER

Trajan's reign	120
The Roman idea of a frontier	121
The fortified road	121
The continuous barrier	122
Domitian's frontiers	122
The Trajanic frontier in Britain	124
The Vallum	124
Its character	124
Views as to its purpose and date	125
It is not the Trajanic frontier	126
The Stanegate	126
Reorganization in Trajan's reign	127
The accession of Hadrian	128
His work in Britain	129
The prelude to it:
(a) a disaster in Britain	129
(b) frontier-work in Germany	130
Comparison between his British and German frontiers	130
Hadrian's Wall	131
The Vallum and its probable function	132
The building of the Wall	135
Its garrison	136
The Roman army in Britain at this time	137
Auxiliaries	138
Legions	139
Native fortification in Wales	139

IX. THE FRONTIER AFTER HADRIAN

The Antonine Wall	140
Peculiarities in its design	140

How it was garrisoned	141
Economics in construction	142
Comparison with the contemporary 'outer limes' in Germany	143
Reasons for these peculiarities	143
Motives for the creation of the Antonine Wall	146
Consequent redistribution of military units	147
History of the Antonine Wall	148
Its building	148
The Brigantian revolt and Julius Verus	149
Was the Antonine Wall involved ?	150
Another British war and Calpurnius Agricola	150
The disaster under Commodus	151
Restoration by Ulpius Marcellus	153
Evacuation of the Antonine Wall	154
The civil wars of 193-197	154
Clodius Albinus	155
The Maeatian invasion	157
Septimius Severus	157
Virius Lupus in Britain	157
Severus repairs Hadrian's Wall	158
His wars in northern Britain	159

Book III. BRITAIN UNDER ROMAN RULE

X. THE MACHINERY OF GOVERNMENT

The Imperial officials	161
Legatus Augusti pro praetore	161
Legati legionum	161
Legati iuridici	162
Procurators	162
Their work	163
Taxation	163
Imperial property	163
Self-government	164
Colonies	164
The municipium	165
Constitution, &c., of such towns	165
Smaller urban communities (vici)	166
Tribal res publicae	166
Their general character	167
Their number and position	167
The concilium provinciae	169
The capital of Roman Britain	170
Colchester	170
London	170
The administrative position of York	171
The Severan subdivision into two provinces	172

XI. THE PEOPLE

Distribution of the population	174
Sources of information	174
The lowland zone	175
The highland zone	176
Prehistoric character of this distribution	177
Density of the population	179
Rise or fall in population during the Roman period	180
In the lowland zone	180
In the highland zone	181
Immigration	181
Analysis of epigraphic evidence	182
Transplantations in the later Imperial age	183
The evidence of physical anthropology	183

XII. THE TOWNS

The town as the vehicle of civilization	186
Contrast between Graeco-Roman and northern views	186
For Rome, to civilize Britain meant to urbanize it	187
The precedent of Gaul	187
The rise of town-life in Roman Britain	189
Mushroom-growth under Claudius	189
Destruction by Boudicca	190
Reconstruction in more orderly fashion	190
Flavian town-planning	191
Characteristics of these towns	192
Their Romanizing function	193
Resistance to this movement, and evidence of its decline	194
New impulse with Hadrian's visit	195
Romano-British town-life at its apogee	196
Number of towns	196
Their size in acres	197
Their population	197
Their economic relation to the country-side	198
Their political and cultural function	199
Their buildings and streets	199
Workshops and dwelling-houses	200
Baths, water-supply, amusements, temples, walls	201
The decay of the towns	201
Archaeological evidence for it	201
The general decay of town-life in the Empire	203
Begins in the third century	203
Rostovtzeff's theory of its causes	203
Checked by the work of Constantius Chlorus	206
Renewed in the fourth century	206

XIII. THE COUNTRY-SIDE

Agriculture in Roman Britain	208
Agriculture based on towns and forts	208

Villas and villages	209
The relation between them	209
They imply two economic systems	210
Two types of field	210
The aratrum and caruca	211
The distinction pre-Roman	212
The villa system	213
Its pre-Roman origin	213
Its growth under Roman rule	214
Its function as an instrument of Romanization	215
Its prosperity outlasts that of the towns	215
Distribution of villas	217
Their choice of sites	217
Their architecture	217
Origin of their plan	218
Size and degree of civilization	219
Economic functions	219
Land-tenure	220
Crops, live stock, produce	220
The villages	221
Their general character	221
Romanization	222
Rise or fall in their population	222
Legal status of their inhabitants	224
Condition of the peasantry	225

XIV. INDUSTRY AND COMMERCE

Industry	226
Sketch of the development of Romano-British industry	226
Effects of the conquest	226
Reaction of producers to the new conditions	227
Equilibrium reached in third century	227
Collapse at the end of the fourth	228
Mining and minerals	228
Ownership and labour	228
Gold	229
Argentiferous lead	229
Mendips	229
Flintshire	230
Shropshire	230
Derbyshire	230
Yorkshire and Alston Moor	230
Tin	230
Copper	231
Coal	231
Iron	232
Iron-smelting	233
Ownership and organization	233
Metal-working industries	234

CONTENTS

xix

Iron goods	234
Bronze-working	234
Goldsmiths and silversmiths	234
Glass	235
Pottery	235
History of the pottery industry	235
Triumph of large-scale production	237
Legionary and auxiliary potteries	238
Bricks and tiles	238
Textiles	239
Fulling-establishments in villas	239
Development of the woollen industry	239
Communications	240
Roads: general character of the Roman system	240
Local traffic	240
The imperial post	241
Construction of roads	241
Water-borne traffic	241
Coinage	241
Commerce	242
Imports	242
Exports	243
Supposed export of wheat under Julian	243
Internal trade	244
Town fora and country markets	244
Hawkers and pedlars	245
Trade across the frontiers	245
With Scotland	245
With Ireland	245

XV. ART

Celtic art in pre-Roman Britain	247
Its specialized and abstract character	248
Its high quality	249
Inartistic character of Romano-British civilization	249
The problems to which this contrast gives rise	250
Contrast between the La Tène tradition and the Graeco-Roman	251
Impossibility of fusing these two traditions	254
Apparent exception: the Bath Gorgon	255
Its Celtic character	255
Absence of British analogues to it	256
Metal-work	256
Survival of Celtic style in the north	257
In Ireland and unconquered Scotland	257
Pottery	257
Celtic tendencies in Castor and New Forest wares	257
Celtic revival under the late Empire	258
Hanging-bowls	258
Conditions of this revival	259

CONTENTS

XVI. RELIGION

Contrast between artistic and religious conditions in Roman Britain	261
The worship of the official Roman gods	261
Juppiter	262
Mars	262
Mercury and others	263
Genii	263
Eastern religions	263
Celtic religion	264
Local gods	264
Sulis, Nodens	264
Brigantia and the gods of the frontier district	265
Celtic gods and Roman worshippers	266
Romano-Celtic temples	267
Their lowland-zone distribution and semi-Roman character	267
Celtic gods imported from the Continent	268
Vitriris	268
Lack of unity in Romano-British paganism	269
Christianity	270
Legends and testimonies concerning its early growth	270
The fourth century	270
Bishops and councils	271
Archaeological evidences	272
Situation at the end of the century	273

Book IV. THE END OF ROMAN BRITAIN

XVII. FROM SEVERUS TO HONORIUS

The early third century	274
The Gallic Empire	274
The age of reorganization	275
Piracy and the Classis Britannica	275
Maximian as Caesar in Gaul	275
Carausius	276
Allectus	277
Constantius Chlorus in Britain	277
Reconstruction of the Wall	277
Towns rebuilt	277
Saxon shore fortified	278
Diocletian's new imperial system	279
The Tetrarchy	280
The Provinces	280
The Army	280
The new system in Britain	281
The House of Constantine	281
Constantine the Great	281
Constans	282
Magnentius	283

CONTENTS

xxi

Constantius II	283
Julian	283
The House of Valentinian	284
The great Pictish war	284
Count Theodosius in Britain	284
Reconstruction of the Wall	285
Signal-stations in Yorkshire	285
Valentia	286
Gratian	287
Magnus Maximus	287
The end of the Wall	287
The House of Theodosius	288
Stilicho in Britain	288
item per lineam valli	289
Cunedda	289

XVIII. THE END OF ROMAN RULE

Constantine III	291
The Gothic war	291
Usurpers in Britain	291
The rescript of Honorius	292
The controversy concerning a Roman reoccupation of Britain after
410	292
Continental writers	292
Gildas	293
Lack of archaeological evidence	294
The evidence of coins	295
The Notitia Dignitatum	295
Bury's view	295
Its breakdown over the case of the Wall	296
The argument from the count of Britain	297
Extent and character of the reoccupation	299
The evidence of coins	299
Dating of the reoccupation	301

XIX. BRITAIN IN THE FIFTH CENTURY

Condition of Britain early in the fifth century	302
Effects of barbarian raids	302
Towns not destroyed	302
Villas decayed	302
The nature of this decay	303
Money no longer much used	303
Peasant revolts and their consequences	303
Analogy with Gaul	304
Evidence from St. Patrick's life	305
Growth of Christianity	305
British affairs from 400 to 450	306
Tribal governments ruling the country	306

The first visit of St. Germanus	306
Incompetence of these governments	307
Economic state of the country	307
Spiritual conditions: Christianity	308
Pelagius	308
Fastidius	309
Ninian	310
Caelestinus and Patrick	311
Ecclesiastical contact between Britain and Rome	311
The date of Easter	311
Pelagianism	311
Germanus	312
Decay of Irish piracy	312
Condition of Britain about 450	313
The 'departure of the Romans': its effect on Romanization and prosperity	313
Vortigern and his times	314
A new political order in Britain	314
Efficiency of this order	315
Its lower moral and cultural standards	315
The backwash of Celticism	316
The disappearance of Roman civilization	316
Two extreme theories	317
The waste chesters	317
Evidence of evacuation but not of massacre	318
No such evacuation in the highland zone	319
Wars between Britons and Saxons	319
The wars of Ambrosius	319
Wansdyke and other military works	319
Arthur	320
The testimony of the Historia Brittonum	320
Interpretation of the testimony	321

Book V. THE ENGLISH SETTLEMENTS, by J. N. L. MYRES

XX. THE SOURCES FOR THE PERIOD: ANGLES, SAXONS, AND JUTES ON THE CONTINENT

Importance of the period	325
Causes of its obscurity	326
Deficiencies of the literary evidence	327
Unsatisfactory character of the archaeological evidence	330
Evidence of place-names	332
A geographical approach essential	333
Angles, Saxons, and Jutes on the Continent	336
Views of Bede and Procopius	336
Tacitus and Ptolemy on the North German tribes	338
Question of the Chauci	339

Saxon expansion and congestion	340
Increasing weakness of Roman frontiers	342
Difficulty of distinguishing between Angles and Saxons	343
Problem of the Jutes	345
Angles, Saxons, and Jutes in Britain	347
Great tribal confusion	348
Inadequacy of Bede's distinctions	349
The archaeological evidence	349
Summary: importance of other than tribal distinctions	350

XXI. THE COURSE OF THE CONQUEST IN KENT AND THE SOUTH-EAST

When did the Anglo-Saxon settlement begin?	352
Reasons for dating the Adventus Saxorum about the middle of the fifth century	353
Difficulty of the Gaulish chronicles	353
Uncertainty of the archaeological evidence	355
The literary tradition of the settlement of Kent	357
Its intrinsic probability	359
The distribution of Kentish cemeteries	360
Their relation to that of the early lathes	361
Composite character of Kentish culture	361
Its bearing on the Jutish problem	363
The Jutes of Hampshire and the Isle of Wight	364
Their probable derivation from Kent	364
Date of their settlement	365
Settlement of the South Saxons	366
The literary tradition	367
The place-names of Sussex	368
The South Saxon cemeteries	368
Settlement of Surrey	369
Evidence of archaeology and heathen names	370
Relation of Surrey to Middlesex	371
The position of London in the age of settlement	372
Problem of the East Saxons	372
Condition of Essex in the Roman and Saxon periods: a backward area	373
Importance of the place-names	375
Contrast with Kent	376
The common features in the settlement of the south-east	377
Similarities of culture, institutions, and place-names	377
The extent of treaty settlement in the literary sources	378
Chronology of the story in Gildas	379
Its relevance to the Anglo-Saxon traditions	380
Ælle of Sussex, the first Bretwalda	380
Historical reconstruction of the age of settlement in the south-east	381

XXII. THE FENLANDS, EAST ANGLIA, AND THE PROBLEM OF WESSEX

Importance of the fenlands in the Anglo-Saxon settlement . . .	383
Condition of the fens in the fifth century . . .	384
Early settlement of the valleys that converge on them . . .	386
Comparison with Roman times . . .	387
Extent of settlement based on the fenlands . . .	388
East Anglia . . .	389
Archaeological evidence for Teutonic occupation in the fifth century . . .	389
Probable fusion of early independent communities in the sixth century . . .	390
The expansion of East Anglia and the Cambridgeshire Dykes . . .	391
Importance of the Icknield Way as a route to the upper Thames . . .	393
The problem of Wessex . . .	393
Character of the upper Thames valley . . .	394
Its early occupation by 'West Saxons' . . .	395
Did they come from the Cambridge region? . . .	395
Archaeological parallels with Middle Anglia . . .	396
Conflict with the West Saxon traditions . . .	396
Character of these traditions examined . . .	397
Archaeological evidence for the settlement of Hampshire and Wiltshire . . .	399
Suggestion of a late occupation supported by the place-names . . .	401
Was the later Wessex settled mainly from the north or south? . . .	402
Meaning of the Wansdyke . . .	402
The southern origin of the house of Cerdic . . .	403
Who were the Gewissae? . . .	404
Archaeological and institutional evidence for the settlement of the middle Thames valley . . .	405
Signs of a British enclave between the upper Thames and Middle Anglia . . .	407
Anglo-Saxon penetration of the Midlands . . .	408
The Hwicce . . .	409
Mixed Anglo-Saxon occupation of the Avon valley . . .	409
Early exploitation of forest land in the Midlands . . .	410

XXIII. THE HUMBRENSSES

The Humber estuary a focus of early settlement . . .	411
Probable extension to Mercia and Bernicia . . .	412
Frisian connexions of the Humbrenses of Deira . . .	412
The Roman cultural background here much weaker than in the south . . .	413
The settlement of Lindsey: its geographical isolation . . .	413
The position of Lincoln in the period of settlement . . .	414
The earliest Mercia, south of the Trent . . .	416
Its northward expansion . . .	417
The Yorkshire Wolds as the centre of Deira . . .	418

CONTENTS

xxv

Early settlements round York	419
Expansion northwards to the Tees valley	420
Bernicia settled late and from the sea	420
But the settlers came from the Humbrenses	421
Struggles of the Bernicians with the Britons recorded by Historia Brittonum	422
Character of the Bernician settlement	422
Summary of the course of the Anglo-Saxon invasions	422
Relation of the historic kingdoms to the earliest areas of settlement	423
Ceawlin and the later Wessex	424

XXIV. THE CHARACTER OF THE CONQUEST

The problem of continuity between Roman Britain and Saxon England	425
Recent increases of knowledge have not brought final answers	425
Illustrations from anthropology and place-name study	426
The problem of urban continuity	427
Necessity of further topographical study	428
Difficulties in interpreting the topographical evidence	429
Literary evidence on problem of urban continuity	431
Can we believe Gildas?	432
Non-urban atmosphere of British and Saxon literary tradition	434
The Christian Church and the fate of the towns	435
Saxon attitude to town life	436
The situation in Kent	436
Case of London	437
The problem of the country-side	440
Breakdown of the villa-system	440
Romano-British and Saxon villages	441
Differences of agricultural equipment and method	442
The contrast more complete in Wessex than elsewhere	442
Interpretation of the Kentish evidence	443
The survival of the Romano-British people	444
Weakness of the case for extermination	445
Anthropological opinion	446
Native persistence in later laws of Wessex and Kent	447
Evidence of Burial Customs	448
The revival of Celtic Art	450
Summary survey of the state of England soon after the middle of the sixth century	451
Conclusion	455
APPENDIXES TO BOOK V	457
BIBLIOGRAPHY FOR BOOKS I-IV	462
BIBLIOGRAPHY FOR BOOK V	478
INDEX	491

LIST OF MAPS

I. Roman Britain	To face page	1
II. Villas and Villages in Hampshire and Wiltshire	„ „	210
III. Chief Areas of Roman Mining in Britain	„ „	228
IV. (a) Local Cults of Celtic Religion; (b) and (c) Dedications to certain Celtic Gods of the Frontier Region	„ „	265
V. The Continental Background to the English Settlements	Page	334
VI. The South-east of Britain	To face page	359
VII. The Fenland Settlement Area	„ „	383
VIII. The Growth of Wessex	Page	392
IX. The Humbrenses	To face page	411
X. The Growth of the English Settlements	„ „	456