

CONTENTS

1.	Research in the field of socio-economic structures	9
2.	A new socio-economic model	12
3.	Regional examples: Illinois and West Germany	13
4.	Characteristics of three base variables	18
	41. First base variable: National Product and income as representative of productivity	18
	41a. Determination of productivity for West Germany	19
	41b. Determination of productivity for Illinois	21
	41c. Regional aspects of productivity in West Germany	24
	41d. Regional aspects of productivity in Illinois	25
	42. Second base variable: Size of family as representative of the social structure	28
	42a. Primary data for the size of households	29
	42b. Geographic remarks concerning size of households in West Germany	30
	42c. Geographical remarks concerning size of households in Illinois	32
	43. Third base variable: Condition and basic facilities of housing units as representative of the housing situation	33
	43a. Definition of criteria pertaining to the housing standard as applied to West Germany	33
	43b. Definition of criteria pertaining to the housing standard as applied to Illinois	35
	43c. Observations relative to the regional situations	37
5.	Correlation model of the three base variables	41
	51. Possible combinations for the correlation model	41
	52. Assessment of the combinations	45
	53. A challenge to regional planning	49
6.	Methodical and technical aspects relating to specific questions	51
	61. Base areas (definition, number, size)	51
	62. Problematics of socio-geographical regions	52
7.	List of combinations of the base variables by base areas	53
8.	Source materials and bibliography	73