

CONTENTS

|                                         |                                                                              |            |
|-----------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 1                                | Introduction                                                          | 1   |
| Part I European Perspectives |                                                                              |            |
| 2                                | We Have a Body!: Kant, Schopenhauer and Bergson                       | 27  |
| 3                                | Redeeming Laughter in Nietzsche                                       | 73  |
| 4                                | Humour and Finitude in Kierkegaard                                    | 97  |
| Part II Chinese Perspectives |                                                                              |            |
| 5                                | A Comic Confucius?                                                    | 127 |
| 6                                | Humour as the Playful Sidekick to Languagein the Zhuangzi | 149 |
| 7                                | Laughing for Nothing in Chan Buddhism                                 | 173 |

|                                                                              |            |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 8 After/words: Laughing Philosophy Away/PhilosophyLaughing Away? | 215 |
| Index                                                                 | 223 |