

CONTENTS

Preface and Acknowledgments	xiii
Introduction	xvii
A. A Brief History of Advertising	xvii
B. The Dilution Prevention Problem	xxi
C. The Restoration of Consumer Sovereignty	xxvi
D. The Foundations of Distributed Capitalism	xxx
Clarification of Terms and Scope	xxxiii

PART ONE The Dilution Prevention Problem

1. Abiding Issues	3
A. Perplexities of Economic Discourse	5
B. Three Recurrent Themes	6
I. The Revealed Preferences Principle	6
II. The Promotion of Progress	10
III. The External Incentives Paradigm	15
C. Demarcation	21
2. Argumentation of the Courts and Contemporary Legal Scholarship	23
A. The Free Riding Hypothesis	24
B. Antitrust as Dilution Law	29
I. Resale Price Maintenance Law	29
1. Limits of the Classic Free Rider Rationale	29
2. Modern Justifications	31
3. Free Riding on Intangible Services	32
4. Reputation Certification	36
5. Image Accreditation	37
6. Maintaining a High Price as a Sign of Quality	39
II. Tying Law	41
1. Beneficial Effects of Free Riding	41
2. Goodwill, Quality, and Reputation Certification	43
3. Image Accreditation	45
III. Refusals to Deal	47
1. Conventional Refusals to Deal Law	47
2. Free Riding on Promotional Information	49

3. Sharing in Networked Industries and in Conventional Market Settings	52
4. Revealed Preferences and Refusals to Deal	53
C. Intellectual Property as Dilution Law	56
I. Trademark Law	58
1. The Emergence of Trademark Dilution Law	58
2. Postsale Confusion	64
3. Trade Dress Protection	66
4. Trademark as Property	68
II. Design Patent Law	70
1. The Emergence of Design Patent Law	70
2. Product Design as Property	72
III. Copyright Law	73
1. Congestion Externalities in Copyright Law	73
2. The Emergence of Copyright Dilution Law	76
3. Reputation Certification and Image Accreditation	78
Conclusion	80

PART TWO The Restoration of Consumer Sovereignty

3. Making Behavioralism Work	91
A. The Revealed Preferences Principle Re-examined	92
I. Anchoring and Adjustment	93
II. Interpretation	95
III. Framing Markets Through the Law	101
B. The External Incentives Paradigm Re-examined	104
I. External Rewards and Intrinsic Motivation	105
II. Interpretation	108
III. Framing Markets Through the Law	110
C. Lessons for the Promotion of Progress	113
I. Bent Market Space	113
1. The Problem of Endogeneity	113
2. Endogeneity and Supreme Court Jurisprudence	115
II. Altering Market Regulatory Paradigms	117
1. Culturally Induced Product Differentiation	117
2. The Market's Frame of Reference as a Public Good	120
3. Competition as a Discovery Procedure	124
4. Promoting Open Approaches	126
III. Bending Legal Space	127
1. Two Meanings of "Idea"	128
2. The Contingent Nature of our Consumption-Based System of Promoting Progress	131
3. The Accepted Account's Structuration of the Economy	134

4. Fashioning Consumer Cognitive Capability	137
A. Incorporating the Manipulation of Consumer Preferences into Market Regulatory Theory	140
I. The Inevitability of Preference Manipulation	140
II. The Revealed Preference Theorist as Regulator	142
1. Limits of the "Freedom of Contract" Paradigm	142
2. Behaviorally Informed Disclosure as a Tool to Counteract Preference Manipulation	144
III. Preference Construction and Affect	146
1. Educating the Subconscious	146
2. Disclosure and Affect-Driven Valuations	148
3. From Persuasion to Information	153
4. Intratype Competition as Expressive Overdetermination in Action	154
B. The Consumer as Culturally Situated Actor: A Reinvigorated Role for Antitrust and Intellectual Property Law	156
I. Two Conceptions of Consumer Sophistication	156
II. The Culturally Situated Consumer	159
1. The Need for an Alternative Conception of the Consumer	159
2. Production and Consumption as Cultural Forms of Expression	161
3. The Consumer as Responsible Agent	162
C. The Construction of Consumption	164
I. The Significance of Promoting Intratype Competition	164
1. Enabling Subconscious Reflection	164
2. Stimulating Two Types of Variety	166
3. A Dual-System Framework to Understand the Construction of Consumption	169
4. Altering Cognitively Relevant Decision Frames	172
II. The Value of Variety in the Marketplace	173
1. Exterior and Interior Mental Dimensions of Intratype Competition	174
2. Exterior and Interior Mental Dimensions of Consumer Sovereignty	176
3. Safeguarding the Cognitive Preconditions of Competition	178
III. Focusing on the Agency Aspect of Markets	179
1. Freedom of Choice and Consumer Sovereignty	179
2. Harnessing Dispersed Knowledge in Society	180
3. Exit, Voice, and Loyalty	183
4. Protecting Market Actors' Freedom to Operate	186
IV. Achieving Reflective Equilibrium: A Gateway to Authentic Consumer Preferences	187
1. Intratype Competition Affords Culturally Situated Consumers an Opportunity to Reflect	187

2. "Authentic" versus "True" Consumer Preferences	190
3. Avoiding Circular Reasoning	191
Conclusion	193

PART THREE The Foundations of Distributed Capitalism

5. Open Approaches to Promoting Innovation and Economic Growth	199
A. Open-Source and Commons-Based Peer Production	200
B. Intellectual Property Law's "Negative Space"	203
C. Spillover Effects and Modern Infrastructure Economics	207
D. The Rise of Collaborative Consumption	216
6. From Market Access to Cumulative Innovation	221
A. The Market Access Doctrine in Antitrust and Intellectual Property Law	222
I. The Consumer Welfare Maximization Debate	222
II. Origins of the Output/Profitability Paradigm	224
B. Dissatisfaction with the Market Access Doctrine	227
C. The Puzzling Persistence of the Market Access Paradigm	229
I. The Enduring Presence of the Market Access Doctrine in the Courts	230
II. The Failure of Courts to Admit the Importance of Market Access	232
III. Possible Explanations for the Durability of the Market Access Doctrine	238
1. Pragmatic Justifications	239
2. The Indeterminacy Problem	241
D. An Independent Function for Market Access	250
I. The Indeterminacy Problem Revisited	250
II. A Three-Step Inquiry into Evaluating Market Access	251
III. Doctrinal Consequences	255
IV. Consumer Preferences for Less Proprietary Forms of Production and Distribution as a Conceptual Foundation for the Market Access Test	257
Conclusion	260
Summary of Results	265
A. Bifurcated Markets	265
B. Inclusive Property and Creative Consumption	267
C. The Supremacy of Consumer Sovereignty	269
Bibliography	271
Table of Cases	301
Index	307