

Contents

Preface	xi
----------------	----

PART I INTRODUCTION

1 Public choice and public policy	3
Individual choice in markets versus collective choice in government	3
Economic analysis and public choice	4
Individual interests and the public interest	6
Three areas of inquiry	7

PART II AGGREGATING VOTER PREFERENCES

2 The politics of left and right	13
The distribution of political preferences	13
Electoral competition	14
Extreme candidates cannot win	17
Primaries and general elections	18
Third parties are not viable	20
Other factors	22
Aggregating voter preferences	22
3 Institutions: proportional versus plurality; parliamentary versus presidential	24
Constitutional constraints	24
Proportional versus plurality voting	25
Proportional voting and party tickets	27
Parliamentary versus presidential governments	28
Other institutional differences	29
Conclusion	30

4	Political strategy: turnout and the distribution of preferences	32
	Voter turnout	32
	Voter polarization	33
	Changing minds, or motivating turnout?	34
	Designing a successful platform	35
	Elections: good alternative to violence	38
	Conclusion	38
5	Multidimensional issue space	40
	What can prevent the issue space from collapsing to a single dimension?	40
	A cyclical majority	41
	Single-peaked preferences	42
	Institutions and stability	44
	Instability in multidimensional issue space	45
	Why are political outcomes stable?	47
	Conclusion	48
6	Why do people vote? Rational ignorance, expressive voting, rational irrationality	50
	Your vote will not affect the election outcome	51
	Rational ignorance	52
	Expressive voting	53
	Rational irrationality	56
	The charity of the uncharitable	57
	Conclusion	58

PART III DESIGNING PUBLIC POLICY

7	Transaction costs and political exchange	63
	The Coase theorem	64
	Large numbers create high transaction costs	67
	Secret ballots and transaction costs	68
	Membership in the low-transaction cost group	69
	The Coase theorem and the public interest	70
8	Political markets: interest groups, rent-seeking, and regulatory capture	73
	The legislative marketplace	73
	Interest group size and effectiveness	75
	Who represents the public interest?	77

Rent-seeking	78
Regulatory capture	81
Conclusion	83
9 Bureaucracy	85
The budget maximization hypothesis	85
The bureau and its sponsor	87
Bureaucrats and the bargaining process	89
Bureaucratic efficiency	90
Conclusion	92
10 Political organization: districts, committees, and institutional design	94
Single-member districts and political competition	94
Two dimensions of political competition	96
The committee system	98
Seniority	100
Federalism	102
Conclusion	104
11 Political entrepreneurship	106
The political marketplace	107
Factors leading toward efficiency	109
Two types of entrepreneurial opportunities	110
Distributive policies and political entrepreneurship	111
Entrepreneurial bureaucrats	113
Will political entrepreneurship create instability?	114
Conclusion	117

PART IV CONSTITUTIONAL DESIGN

12 Constitutional and post-constitutional decision-making	121
Politics as exchange: the unanimity criterion	122
Optimal decision-making rules	123
Optimal rules, more generally	124
Evaluating constitutional rules	125
Some criticisms	126
Are all political decisions post-constitutional?	127
The constitutional challenge	128
13 Interest groups and constitutional evolution	130
Government as a stationary bandit	131

	Interest group activity over time	133
	Enforcing constitutional constraints	134
	Conclusion	136
14	Checks and balances: elites and masses	138
	Government growth	139
	Elites versus masses	141
	Conclusion	142
	Index	145