

Table of Contents

Preface and Acknowledgements	V
Abbreviations	XI
1. Illustris magnificentia tua legis tenorem ad omnium notitiam faciet pervenire: Government and Communication	1
1.1. State of research	4
1.1.1. State communication	4
1.1.2. Organizational framework: the Late Roman regional administration	5
1.1.3. Communication by and through the regional administration ..	9
1.2. Research outline	12
2. Means of official Communication and imperial Constitutions ..	15
2.1. Terminology	15
2.1.1. General	15
2.1.2. Types of official communication	16
2.2. Sources	18
2.2.1. Literary sources	18
2.2.2. Document collections	20
2.2.3. Epigraphic and papyrological sources	21
2.2.4. Legal sources	22
2.3. Methodology	33
2.3.1. Geographic validity of preserved constitutions	35
3. Omnia libellis ad nostrum comitatum mittantur: Communicating from Periphery to Center	39
3.1. Administrative reporting channels	40
3.2. Fiscal affairs	42
3.2.1. Regulations with bearing on decurions	42

3.2.2.	Annonarian supplies	43
3.2.3.	Appropriation or confiscation of ownerless properties	43
3.2.4.	Municipal auditors (discussores)	47
3.3.	Official communication in the context of judicial processes . . .	48
3.4.	Policing	56
3.4.1.	Counterfeiting and other capital crimes	56
3.4.2.	Cursus publicus	57
3.4.3.	Corruption, maladministration, and illicit behavior of officials	58
3.4.4.	Soldiers and deserters	63
3.5.	Construction oversight	65
3.6.	Connecting center and periphery: petitions from cities and provincial councils	66
3.6.1.	Petitions from provincial councils and cities	67
3.6.2.	Acclamations	72
3.7.	Diachronic analysis	76
3.7.1.	Communication originating from governors	77
3.7.2.	Communication originating from vicars	79
3.7.3.	Communication originating from prefects	80
3.8.	Synthesis and conclusion	81
4.	Omnia omnibus manifesta fiant: Communicating from Center to Periphery	87
4.1.	The creation of official documents	87
4.1.1.	Creation process of written imperial communication	87
4.1.2.	Creation process of written communication of vicars and prefects	93
4.2.	The official dissemination structure for imperial communication in the 6th century CE	95
4.3.	Analysis of dissemination channels	101
4.3.1.	Communication to a limited number of recipients	102
4.3.1.1.	Epigraphic sources	102
4.3.1.2.	Literary sources	108
4.3.1.3.	Legal sources and document collections	110
4.3.2.	Communication to a large number of recipients	114
4.3.2.1.	Epigraphic sources	114
4.3.2.2.	Literary sources	117
4.3.2.3.	Legal sources and document collections	120
4.4.	Synthesis and conclusion	129

5. Centripetal and centrifugal Communication in Action: The Case of Taxation	133
5.1. Communicating fiscal matters: the administrative framework .	133
5.1.1. The cura epistularum in the 6 th century according to John Lydus and Cassiodorus	139
5.1.2. Limitations of Lydus' testimony	141
5.1.3. Function of the cura epistularum	144
5.2. Regular instances of taxation	150
5.3. Superindictions	159
5.4. Synthesis and conclusion	163
6. Patterns of centrifugal and centripetal Communication: Developments and historical Contextualization	167
6.1. From the early 4th century CE until Theodosius II and Valentinian III	167
6.2. From the 450s CE until the death of Justinian (565 CE)	178
7. Communication Patterns in the Late Roman Administration: Summary and Outlook	187
Appendices	193
Appendix I: Emendation of select Constitutions	195
Preliminary notes	195
Dating imperial constitutions	196
Appendix II: Data for centripetal Communication (ch. 3)	213
Introductory remarks	213
Appendix III: Data for centrifugal Communication (ch. 4.3.1)	221
Appendix IV: Data for centrifugal Communication (ch. 4.3.2)	233
Sources	299
Bibliography	303
Index – References	325
General Index	335