

José Franco-Chasán

The Reception of Positivism in Spain

Pedro Dorado Montero

Contents

1 Introduction	1
References	3
2 Contextualising Dorado Montero	5
2.1 A Christian Childhood	8
2.2 Relativism vs. Religious Convictions	16
2.3 A Brief Romance with Positivism	22
2.4 Krausism: The Relevance of Instruction and Education	27
2.5 A Socialist in Spirit	29
2.6 The Interspersion of Anarchism	33
2.7 A Struggle to Unify Sociology	36
References	38
3 Historical Background	43
3.1 Spain and the Two Centuries	43
3.2 Scenario for the Reception of Positivism	47
3.3 Development of Positivism: Status Quaestionis	55
3.3.1 The Neoclassical Schools	56
3.3.2 The Positivist Schools	59
3.3.3 The Eclectic Schools	65
References	70
4 Dorado Montero's Foreign Influences	81
4.1 Key authors	83
4.1.1 Immanuel Kant (1724–1804)	83
4.1.2 Karl David August Röder (1806–1879)	88
4.1.3 Georg Heinrich Schneider (1846–1904)	92
4.1.4 Raffaele Garofalo (1851–1934)	94
4.1.5 Enrico Ferri (1856–1929)	98
4.1.6 Vincenzo Lilla (1837–1905)	109
4.1.7 Leo Tolstoy (1828–1910)	110

4.2	Other Influences	117
4.2.1	Karl Christian Friedrich Krause (1781–1832)	117
4.2.2	Antonio Marro (1835–1913)	118
4.2.3	Luigi Lucchini (1847–1929)	119
4.2.4	Giulio Fioretti	120
4.2.5	Ugo Conti (1864–1942)	120
4.2.6	Herbert Spencer (1820–1903)	121
4.2.7	Alexander Herzen (1812–1870)	122
	References	122
5	Dorado Montero's Criminal Doctrine: The Protective Law of the Criminals	127
5.1	The Delinquent	129
5.2	The Treatment	130
5.3	Criminal Procedure	131
5.4	Punishment	137
5.5	Imputability	144
5.6	Indeterminate Sentences	149
	References	158
6	Locating Dorado Montero in Spanish Doctrine	163
6.1	Labelling the Unclassifiable	164
6.2	The 'Doradian' Contribution	184
6.3	Final Thoughts	190
	References	192
7	Conclusions	195
	Sources and Bibliography	199
	Primary Sources	199
	Legal Literature	207
	Non-Legal Literature	217
	Bibliography	219